

About the Editors

Monica Nandan, PhD, MSW, has over 25 years of experience working in communities and serving on nonprofit boards dealing with aging, sustainability of nonprofit programs, homelessness, social welfare, bereavement, and health care. With her finance (MBA), health care administration, and social work academic training, she has taught traditional and nontraditional courses in social work. For example, she has taught courses on social innovation, community organizing and social entrepreneurship, and empowering women through social entrepreneurship. She has served as chairperson of social work programs and as interim dean of a college of health and human services.

For almost 15 years, her scholarship activities were in gerontology and health care. Some of the journals she has published in include Journal of Gerontological Social Work, Social Work Research, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, and Gerontology & Geriatric Education. Over the past eight years, her scholarship has pertained to social entrepreneurship and interdisciplinary education. Her more recent publications are in the Journal of Faculty Development, Journal of College Teaching and Learning, Journal of Interprofessional Care, International Journal of Social Entrepreneurship and Innovation, Education + Training, and Administration in Social Work. She also contributed book chapters in publications like Occupational Social Work/Employee Assistance Program, Encyclopedia of Human Services and Diversity, and Aging Education in a Global Context. She serves on the editorial board of the International Management Review. She has published several pieces in gerontological, social work, and social work managers' newsletters. She has presented at several national conferences, and over past three years she has been invited to present at an internationally recognized institution of higher education in Mumbai, India.

Tricia B. Bent-Goodley, PhD, received her MSW from the University of Pennsylvania and her PhD from Columbia University, and she has over 25 years of experience as a professional social worker. Through sustained federal and foundation funding, she has developed and designed culturally specific interventions rooted in social value creation and entrepreneurial thinking in areas such as healthy relationship education; HIV prevention; faith-based interventions; engaging men and boys; and sexual assault and domestic violence education, prevention, and intervention. Serving in numerous local and national capacities, she has received extensive national, regional, and local awards and demonstrates her commitment to addressing issues of inequity and social justice through her service.

Bent-Goodley is a professor at Howard University School of Social Work. As the editor-in-chief of Social Work, the flagship journal of the National Association of Social Workers, she was the second African American woman to serve in this role in the journal's 60+ year history. She served as the founding director of the Howard University Interpersonal Violence Prevention Program—the office dedicated to providing prevention education, advocacy, intervention, policy development, coordination, training, and bystander prevention education in the areas of sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence, and stalking. She also serves as a founding member and chair of the Prince George's County Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team and is a former national elected board member of the Council on Social Work Education. Bent-Goodley is the author and editor of many publications, including The Ultimate Betrayal: A Renewed Look at Intimate Partner Violence and By Grace: Challenges, Strengths, and Promise of African American Marriage.

Gokul Mandayam, PhD, joined the faculty of University at Buffalo School of Social Work (UBSSW) in the fall of 2017 and is affiliated with the school's interdisciplinary social innovation and social entrepreneurship initiative. Before joining UBSSW, he taught macro social work practice courses for 12 years at various universities in the United States, the Middle East, and India.

His interdisciplinary research interests include social innovation and entrepreneurship, corporate social responsibility, nonprofit management, program evaluation, and application of spatial analysis technology for human services. Before coming to the United States, he consulted for a variety of social development projects in India on topics ranging from non-land-based income generation and evaluation of fish harvesting practices in coastal communities to government nutrition programs and female infanticide. He has published articles on microfinance and spatial analysis for planning social services and has presented at several national and international conferences.